MARRIAGE BY PROXY IS PERFECTLY VALID

No Concern of United States
What Form of Ceremony Is Required by Japan.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

COMMISSIONER-GENERAL OF IMMIGRATION CAMINETTI in his annual report, just issued, takes exception to the marriages by proxy on the part of Japanese citizens residing in the United States with their countrywomen in Japan; that is to say, several from them by the 6,000 odd miles of Pacific Ocean. He also expresses a doubt as to the validity of these unions.

This seems to be a trifle far-fetched on his part. For, providing that marriages by proxy are valid according to Japanese law, that is all that is necessary. It is no concern of the United States what the form of ceremony that is required by Japanese law to constitute a legal marriage, a feature of which, by the way, is drinking tea simultaneously out of the same teacup, provided with a double spout. Each foreign nation has its own peculiar wedding ceremony customs, and it would take the United States government much too far were it to attempt to include these in its own marriage laws.

In the case of Japan, the exception taken by the Commissioner-General of Immigration to Japanese marriages by proxy is particularly unfair, in view of the difficulties made by the United States government about admitting Japanese into the country, and of its excluding them from the rights of American citizenship, to which it is perfectly willing to admit other Asiatics, such as Syrians, Turks, Persians, Armenians, and immigrants from Asiatic Russia.

But it is not only the Japanese who permit marriages by proxy. Such unions are recognized by several countries in Europe. Thus, the widowed ex-Queen of Naples, sister of the late Emperor of Austria, and who makes her home in Paris, was married by proxy, in 1859, at Munich. Nor was it until four weeks later that she first set eyes on landing at the Italian seaport of Bari, upon Francis II, King of Naples, who was already in law her husband.

In the same way, the late Queen Pia of Portugal, grandmother of ex-King Manuel, was married in September, 1862, at Turin, by proxy in the presence of her father, King Victor Emmanuel II, and arrived only a month later at Lisbon where she was welcomed on landing by King Luis, who was already her husband, but whom she had never seen in his life before until that moment.

Last year Queen Wilhelmine of Holland signed papers which enabled Maria Vanderveer, a teacher of one of the high schools at The Hague, to marry in that city, by proxy, William F. Dumoulin, a Dutchman, in the automobile business at Detroit, Mich., and who, being unable to return to Holland for the ceremony, had deputed his friend, Hendrik Kneifert, a resident of The Hague, to act there as his proxy. That is to say, on the day on which Maria Vanderveer went through the ceremony of wedding at The Hague, with Hendrik Kneifert representing at the altar her husband, the latter was celebrating the occasion by a dinner at Detroit, to his friends.

Mrs. Vanderveer thus married, arrived in the United States, not as an engaged woman, but as a bride, and was met on her arrival in New York by William F. Dumoulin, already her husband, and with whom she now makes her home at Detroit. Nor were there any objections made to her admission by the immigration authorities at Ellis Island.

Marriages by proxy are quite frequent among military officers and civilian officials on duty in the Dutch Indies, who, unable to return home to wed, delegate a friend or relative to act as proxy in the wedding ceremony. In Holland, their brides then making the journey out to Java, and in each instance, however, Queen Wilhelmine's written sanction has to be obtained for a marriage of this kind. It is a pity that facilities of this kind have not been accorded to the Englishmen resident in India. It would have the effect of averting many heartbreaks and disappointments, as, for instance, when some devoted woman, having prepared a home in India for her betrothed, sends money to England to enable her to secure his trousseau and to travel out to India in comfort, but finds when he meets her on landing at Bombay, that during the trip out she has changed her mind about marrying him, and has given her heart and hand to one of her fellow passengers.

Lord Tankerville, who has an American wife, in the person of Miss Lenora Van Meter, of New York, and whose eldest son, young Lord Ouston, now seventeen years of age, was for a time at school in Boston, has just presented to the Royal Zoological Gardens, in London, a pair of his wonderful white wild cattle, on receipt of a pledge from the society that it would not dispose of the animals or any progeny that they might have.

This is the first occasion of his making such a gift, and possibly, by reason of his American affiliations, he might be induced to present a pair of his cattle, in the same way, to some representative zoological society in the United States.

His white cattle form a herd that is absolutely unique, and have been included in the huge park around his Castle of Chillingham, in Northumberland, at any rate since the beginning of the thirteenth century, and probably even still longer. They are the only survivors of the wild cattle which roamed throughout Britain in the days of Julius Caesar; that is to say, nearly 2,000 years ago, and have been kept during all these hundreds of years of seclusion in Chillingham Park, rigorously free from any intermixture with alien blood. Nor is there any record of the herd in Chillingham Park ever having given birth to any black calf.

The cattle are small, with very straight backs, rough and curly coats, and upwardly directed horns. The inside of the ears and the muzzles are red, while the hoofs and tips of the horns are symmetrically marked with black. They are exceedingly fierce and will keep themselves in the remote portions of the park, as far distant as possible from the castle, and have resisted all efforts to tame them, even in ever to slight a degree.

Every now and then the herd has to be thinned out by shooting, and the shooting parties for this purpose, given by the Earls of Tankerville, have always proved extremely exciting. Thus, during the lifetime of the late Lord Tankerville, King Edward, then Prince of Wales, narrowly escaped losing his life through a charge of one of the white bulls, while out shooting at Chillingham Castle. The superb head and horns of the bull in question are figured on the walls of Sandringham, and serve to recall to his widow, Queen Alexandra, what her consort, always declared to have been the closest shave of death that he had ever experienced, although he had shot bears and wolves in Russia, elephants in Ceylon, and tigers in India.

The present Lord Tankerville is a many-sided and extremely gifted man, who, descended from Richard Bennett, brother of the Lord Mayor of London in 1602, has been in turn a midshipman of the royal navy, an officer in the army, an aide-de-camp of the seventh Duke of Marlborough when he was Viceroy of Ireland; a cowpuncher and rancher in North Wyoming, where he was on terms of intimacy with Theodore Roosevelt; afterwards a fellow evangelist of Moody and Sankey, eventually taking the latter's place in Moody's party and singing the hymns, and has conducted a number of revival meetings on both sides of the Atlantic.

The earl has now become a Christian Scientist, has been president of the Antivivisection Society in England, is an extremely clever painter of miniatures, and is the founder and manager of a whole system of model laundries in the suburbs of London.

He met his wife, Miss Van Meter, formerly of Tacoma, but afterwards of New York, while engaged in revivalist work on this side of the Atlantic. Both he and she possessed, at any rate, during the early years of their marriage, superb voices, which rendered them in great demand at religious gatherings. Through his grandmother, the lovely Corisande de Gramont, of the French ducal house of that name, he is a descendant, on the left hand, of Henry of Navarre, King of France, and it is from her, undoubtedly, that he has inherited those good looks for which the De Gramonts have been celebrated in English as well as in French history.

DENIES CRITICISM MADE BY O'GORMAN

Carnegie Says Charge Against His Peace Foundation Is Unfounded.

New York, February 21.—Andrew Carnegie asserted to-day that his peace foundation was "not one iota of truth" in the criticism of his peace endowment expressed on Thursday by United States Senator O'Gorman during a discussion by the Senate of a renewal of the general arbitration treaties.

Senator O'Gorman declared that the Carnegie endowment was not organized for the promotion of peace, that its principal purpose was to minister and corrupt, for the benefit of certain interests represented by those who dominated it, and that it sought to promote Anglo-American alliance. To prove this he quoted from an article, entitled "Triumph of Democracy," written by Mr. Carnegie, in which a question was suggested.

In his statement to-day Mr. Carnegie gave a list of the directors of the foundation, and said that each was chosen because he was one of the foremost citizens of his community. "Triumph of Democracy," he said, "was written twenty-eight years ago. It is a way safe to prophesy," he added, "if you do not fix a date for fulfillment; triumph of democracy" had this meaning, and a look ahead it remained. The future has not been revealed to us."

Mr. Carnegie recalls that in his "early days" he was treasurer of a committee here, which cooperated with one in Canada favorable to annexation with America.

"There were a number of prominent men in Canada who thought that the future of Canada depended upon union with us. Of this no trace exists to-day, however. Canada is marching forward developing a career for herself. Canada may some day play the part

Had Lung Trouble and Expected to Die

With the civilized world anxiously seeking a specific for Lung Trouble, the number of recoveries brought about through the use of Eckman's Alternative, a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles, is attracting universal attention. For fifteen years Eckman's Alternative has been used and the reports of recoveries in many supposed hopeless cases indicate that this medicine is doing a vast amount of good. Read this:

"Gentlemen,—I was taken sick in November, 1908, with very bad cold and dizzy spells. The doctor then pronounced my case as Malaria Fever. I grew steadily worse. Had two consultations with him, but the verdict was that the fever had affected my lungs and that my case was hopeless; only gave me two months to live. My physician had tried most all kinds of treatment and none did me any good, so he asked my husband if he objected to him trying a proprietary medicine. So I began on your Alternative. I was in bed from November 20, 1908, until February 25, 1909, and was thought to be dead. To-day I am healthier and stronger than ever."

Health Teacher---Quaker---Tragles

Three Names That Have Been Adopted by People of Richmond.

Health Teacher, Quaker and Tragles are three names that are on the tongues of more people these days than any other three names in the history of the city. And why? Because the results derived from the use of the grand old Quaker Remedies in this city are becoming greater and greater each day.

The name Health Teacher, because it stands for the man who has made the study of the Quakers and their medicines a life study, and who realizes, after years of experience, that he has in the Quaker Herb Remedies a line of medicines that have never had any equal in the permanent curing of catarrh.

The name Quaker, because it brings to mind the remedies being introduced in this city, and have to their credit a list of over 300 cures in this county and the surrounding territory, besides the hundreds of reports made by people who are still using the remedies for chronic cases, and who have been deriving great results, although not yet completely cured. These remedies are composed of 16 native herbs, roots, barks, berries, leaves, gums and blossoms, and are guaranteed by the government to contain no opiates or chemicals of any kind whatever. If you have not yet tried them in your case, you are surely missing a grand opportunity of getting rid of the cause of your trouble.

The name 'Tragles,' because it reminds us of the firm of druggists whose store has been the headquarters of the Quaker Remedies since they were first brought to this city. This firm has what is reputed to be one of the finest and most heavily stocked drug stores in Richmond. He makes a specialty of catering to the wants of particular people, and has been exceptionally successful in that one line, which accounts for his rapidly increasing business. His motto is: "If a druggist sells it, it's here."

If you have not already begun the use of the Quaker Remedies, do not put the matter aside any longer. Surely when a remedy has done what the Quaker has done it should establish confidence in the most skeptical and prejudiced person in the country. Days are always dangerous, but especially so when health is in the balance. Call to-day at the Tragles' drug store, 317 East Broad Street, at once and obtain Quaker Herb Extract—$1.00 per bottle, three for $2.50 or six for $5.00. Oil of Balm, 50c.—Advertisement.
